March 2014

Welcome to my first newsletter. It has now been just over 6 months since the arm break and I am pleased to say that I'm back in the studio again – and it feels great. I'm still working on the painting that was meant to be the final piece for my solo exhibition at Salerno Gallery in November last year, but alas it didn't make it to the show for obvious reasons! I probably have one or two more sessions before that one is ready and I will be sure to send an announcement when it is finished.

But that's not the only thing I've been working on... I've also finished four new smalls, and they have just been added to the website today. In case you haven't visited the website lately I have included photos of the new work. The prices for these smaller works are $180 for the children's pieces ("Robot No. 7" and "Mushroom House") and $250 for the slightly more surreal pieces ("Walk On" and "Moving Picture"). These later pieces may have been influenced by my desire to move forward and get on with life again after being literally stopped in my tracks with the broken arm! It truly was torture being unable to paint for all those months.

Angela is taking the market to Sydney this year. Next month she is hoping to get a spot at the Bondi Beach market on Sunday 13 April, then to Glebe toward the end of May. She will also be returning to the Leura Village Fair in October this year, and once confirmed I will send an announcement.

I look forward to keeping you updated from time to time with news from the studio.

Cheers, Michael
